Supernatural, Lucifer, "I will come again, and I will be millions." -Eva Peron

5x01 Lucifer centric musings. G or PG. Close to gen either way.

Oct. 21st, 2010 08:05 am (UTC)

Set during 5x01, Lucifer centric + musings on him

When it comes, the force of his expulsion from Hell is so strong that he wonders if he could have remained in the cage, if he had wanted to, or if he would have been swept out regardless of his will.

Freedom is exhilarating, however, and no, he doesn't have much time to savor it before he must be prepared for his destined fight (and how ironic is that, that he who rebelled against Heaven for the free will to not bow to the humans is now stripped of the free will to avoid this fight?) but he still savors walking on Earth in his full glory.

Without confinement in a vessel, without being required to fit himself into a form that humans can comprehend, he walks to the edge of the human city he was released in, and turns back to look at it.

Even if he is the Devil, the Adversary, he is an angel, and so his form inspires praise from humans even as they are giving up their ghosts.

Too soon, however, he is at the edge of the city, and he can no longer walk on Earth in his true form. Not without drawing down the wrath of God, and Lucifer has no doubt that He would intervene to put Lucifer back on course for his destiny.

He takes to wing, and in Delaware a man named Nick begins to have nightmares.